A church of 1913 designed by the architects Clegg Miller & Riley of Ballarat. The form is that of a simple gable nave without projecting transepts although the transition from nave to chancel is marked by twin gables and a central doorway in the plane of the nave walls. The construction is of brick with contrasting window, door and gable dressings. The windows are generally of lancet form but the western gable contains a trefoil window with three curved sides, a typical motif of the Decorated Gothic.
